To accelerate impact through knowledge sharing and collaboration

ISC Member Coalitions

Collaboration for transformational change in infrastructure

It is crystal clear. This will be a century of change and our actions now and in the near future will decide our direction. This is our decade of opportunity, and we must put that opportunity into place within cities, regions and nations. Collaborations that introduce others' worldviews, perspectives and disciplines to our existing tools, technologies and knowledge can help generate the innovations in policy, principles, practices and products that we need in the infrastructure space.

We need to drive actions that deliver outcomes - such as net zero, resilience and inclusivity – at scale and at pace, paving the way to a positive future for planet, people and prosperity.

ISC Member Coalitions transform leading, expert thinking into accelerated impact and change. The Coalitions stimulate market and societal transformation for a positive future for people, planet, economy and industry.

Coalitions provide an important platform to engage with industry and create a lasting legacy for your organisation. Each coalition will work over a three-year period to define a key issue, design practical and dynamic solutions, and deploy a toolkit for implementation. The fourth year will see the outcomes scaled and shared across the industry. Each coalition will develop a unique workplan tailored to address the specific challenges and opportunities of the key issue. Workplan actions may include methodologies, tools, training, pilot projects, workshops and policy campaigns.

An opportunity to deliver significant influence on a positive future for the industry in Australia and Aotearoa New Zealand.

The purpose

“Our competitors are not our market colleagues but the ticking clocks of climate change and social inequality. Our competitive advantage will be defined by the rate at which we share to reduce the learning curve of others.” Ainsley Simpson, CEO, Infrastructure Sustainability Council.

The ISC has convened the following coalitions to accelerate industry’s impact on:

Climate Action

To accelerate climate action in every town, city and region through a place-based approach.

Progressing a system, networked approach to accelerating decarbonisation focusing on towns, cities and regions rather than leveraging the knowledge and work undertaken at an asset, sector and material level.

Resilience

To accelerate systemic resilience so that infrastructure can enable thriving lifestyles, communities and nations, now and into the future.

Resilience in infrastructure is not just about protecting the built forms but ensuring that the service the asset provides will remain flexible, agile and resilient through the shocks and changes of the coming century. It is about building resilience in a systemic way.

Circular Economy

To accelerate the transition to circular business models and economies in infrastructure.

This coalition will complement and align existing progress in circular economy supply chains and initiatives, by focusing on the ‘economy’ of circular economy and looking at how to integrate the infrastructure network of systems to drive circularity through business models and local economies.

Modern Slavery

To accelerate the eradication of modern slavery from the infrastructure supply chain.

This coalition will build awareness and understanding within the industry, as well as work with the supply chain to identify risks and red flags. The coalition will develop mitigation and remediation strategies while driving action to eradicate modern slavery.

Case-study – Modern Slavery Coalition

Established in response to the Australian Modern Slavery Act 2019, the ISC Modern Slavery Coalition brought together organisations in the industry to understand how to respond to the new requirements under the Act.

The Coalition worked together to understand the requirements for the legislation and determine the best way to deliver modern slavery statements, and the risks and opportunities for business and industry. Understanding the risks and opportunities for business and industry. Supported by human rights experts the Coalition quickly deepened their understanding of Modern Slavery, risks within the supply chain, and opportunities to build capacity to better address this issue.

Over two years of working together, the Coalition moved from a workplan focused on compliance into one that is proactively looking at ways to address modern slavery, and ultimately eradicate modern slavery from the supply chain in the Australian Infrastructure Industry.

The Coalition continues to meet regularly, discussing developments in modern slavery, legislation, and work towards delivering a structured workplan with dynamic tools.

Examples of outcomes delivered by the Modern Slavery Coalition include:

- Awareness building webinar delivered to ISC Members and suppliers, designed to deepen the understanding in the industry of Modern Slavery and the risks in the Supply Chain.
- An Impact Note aligning IS Rating Scheme credits to Modern Slavery

- A comprehensive document which outlines credits in the IS Rating Scheme where Modern Slavery outcomes from projects, and recommended best practice principles, can be applied.

- Scenario based training. Providing practical advice and experience on addressing modern slavery allegations in the workplace.
- Expert presentations. A series of experts delivered presentations to build knowledge on a range of topics or themes for the coalition.
- Development of supply chain risk tools to support small to medium enterprises better understand, address and communicate modern slavery risks.
